In the explanatory dictionaries of the Uzbek language, the word grateful is interpreted as satisfaction with someone else's kindness, merit, and sometimes, considering oneself spiritually obliged, and the word gratitude is interpreted as appreciation, gratitude, satisfaction with the condition or possession of such a feeling. Materials related to the speech genre of expressing gratitude show that in the language system, the speech genre of expressing gratitude is expressed either through verbs expressing gratitude, such as thank, pleased, be in debt, be content, or through other speech genres expressing gratitude in content.

- Раҳмат, қизим! – деди мулойим жилмайиб. – Ширин сув экан....

In the medium of the spoken duet genre:

The speech genre of gratitude in the form of a micromatna can also act as an introduction or conclusion to a specific speech in various speech situations. So, as noted above, it is possible to distinguish between the primary and secondary functions of the gratitude speech genre in certain speech situations. Gratitude acts as a separate conversational genre in the primary function, and in the secondary function - as a continuation of speech by filling in the introductory or final parts in a particular speech.

Gratitude forms the introductory part of speech in such speech processes as formal and regular speech in various aspects of life, such as political, social, household, congratulatory, and manifests itself in this as a microcosm:

For example, an introduction to political speech:
