The cities of Uzbekistan have long been famous as centers of science, and libraries (Arabic kutub - "books", Persian khana - means "house") functioned in the cities. Libraries are considered a place of information gathering. Libraries have sources of information in the form of books, newspapers, magazines, videos and audiotapes. Especially in the 9th-12th centuries, during the reign of Amir Temur and the Timurids, huge libraries were established in the country, and science flourished. In the following centuries, especially during the khanate period, large libraries functioned in the palaces of the rulers in the big cities of the region, especially in the cities of Samarkand, Bukhara, Khiva, Kokand. According to Sadri Zia, at the beginning of the 20th century, there were 13 libraries and 96 reading rooms in the city of Bukhara alone. Manuscripts in Chinese, Uyghur, Pashto, Persian, Arabic and other languages were stored in the library of the ruler's palace in Bukhara. The library was staffed by librarians, mushrifs, pamphleteers and mirzas. In those days, the main purpose of creating libraries was first of all to introduce young people, school teachers, madrasa students, intellectuals to new literature, textbooks, and press regularly. Because it was impossible to find these literature and newspapers anywhere else. Today, the head of our state, Shavkat Mirziyoyev, is incomparable in establishing good values and traditions in the life of society, in particular, in raising the spiritual-intellectual potential, consciousness and worldview of our people, especially the young generation. paying special attention to increasing the important reading culture, adopting many decisions and decrees and implementing them. In particular, the President of the Republic of Uzbekistan "On further improvement of information-library services to the population of the Republic of Uzbekistan" and the Cabinet of Ministers "In the field of accounting, storage and write-off of information-library resources in information-library institutions on the approval of certain regulatory legal documents" was adopted. All these decisions are aimed at the development of reading and its promotion. The core of the words "Book", "Library", "Library" is actually derived from Arabic and serves one purpose, that is, to enrich human spirituality. During the period of advancement of science and technology, the mission of libraries has changed, and there is a need to update the rules in the librarian's professional activity. Now, indicators such as the number of events, readers and the number of books issued cannot be the main factor in evaluating the activity of the Information Resource Center. A librarian is also required to have skills in working with audiovisual and electronic documents and modern technology. Who exactly is a librarian? What is required of the modern librarian? The librarian opens forms for students, writes down the names and numbers of the books given to him. Maintains order in the library, repairs outdated books, makes a list of obsolete books, receives new ones, fills in systematic and alphabetical catalogs, conducts interviews with students. That's all? Actually, the work of this librarian is not so simple and easy. The modern librarian should make it possible for readers to get acquainted with the rarest of books, published in small editions or, if not, long ago printed and not reprinted. It is also their task to be able to work with the electronic library and electronic database, to help users find books, electronic books and the necessary sites. The modern librarian must not only be a proficient user of the Internet, but must also have a good understanding of library search engines. This is the mission of the state librarian, who is now entering a new phase of development. Reading a good book in a beautiful library is definitely an ideal combination. If we look at the history, the first library appeared approximately 2600 years before our era. But unfortunately, there were no archives at that time that would save all the information, but they have not come down to us. Today's modern libraries are built in such a convenient and unique way that everyone's eyes are happy to see them. So what makes modern libraries stand out? From their unusual design to the fact that the books are published in various forms, they will not fail to attract attention. Modern libraries are bound to surprise readers with new architectural styles. The best defense is mutability, the ability to transform into a new form while retaining the essence. This also applies to the availability of libraries. If they do not change according to the requirements of the times, people will quickly find a new program for themselves, throw the books into the furnace! Library buildings are converted into commercial establishments. Libraries must change. Future libraries need to be created. Both in the West and in Russia, this trend is already showing. I present some of them. There are more public libraries in the United States than there are McDonald's restaurants and Starbucks coffee shops. A public library is not just a library. For example, the list of free services offered by the Boston Public Library includes: shelter, free meals, free medical care, and free legal and financial services. One of the most modern libraries in Korea is the National Smart Library of South Korea. It is located in Sejong. The National Library is the first branch of the National Library of Korea, and it was built in the multifunctional administrative city of Korea. Built by the renowned Samoo Architects & Engineers, the exterior of the complex is reminiscent of the shape of a flipping book and, thanks to its unusual design, makes it easy to find the book space. The Sejong Library is not only a modern facility with books on various fields, but also a perfect complex incorporating the most advanced digital technologies for the convenience of readers. That's why the library was named "E-BRARY" (that is, emotion-emotion, brary-library). In addition, the eye-pleasing "Youth Library" was opened yesterday in Khorezm. The library with a collection of 100,000 books contains 7,000 types of textbooks, scientific and fiction literature, and the electronic database of the National Library of Uzbekistan is also connected. Also, since September 27, 2010, the library of the Azerbaijan Cultural Center named after Heydar Aliyev under the Embassy of the Republic of Azerbaijan in the Republic of Uzbekistan has been successfully operating. The library fund has about 3 thousand books and magazines in Azerbaijani, Uzbek, Russian and English languages. Dozens and hundreds of libraries are being established in our region. The purpose of these is to enrich the spirituality of the people, society, and the young generation, to expand their worldview, to adapt their lifestyle to the requirements of the times, to form the national consciousness of the growing and developing youth, and to educate them well. Wise words like "The time is not yours, you rule the time" are being heard in our nation. The age we live in is the age of "Advanced Technologies". If we do not adapt our reading to the requirements of the times, the works and manuscripts created by our ancestors for hundreds of years may lose their value, we need to understand this correctly. To this end, the President said: "A person who has read a book and worked on himself will have wings. He will not be indifferent. His strength is in his knowledge. That's why he doesn't like anyone. It does not flatter the "adults". He has knowledge, he has knowledge. This is why we tell you to read a book." In fact, the book gives a person special strength, makes his thoughts clear, sharpens his mind, and helps him gain his place in society. Reading is a food for human thinking.
